Executive Summary

During the second quarter the Center achieved unprecedented north to south coverage of our region. Outreach Assistant Sarah Bennett assisted Advisory Board Member Dot Moore in Volusia County every week in our southernmost community of New Smyrna Beach, helping record sites and maintaining county collections. Director Sarah Miller spoke several times each month in the quarter municipal preservation boards, civic organizations, museum, and volunteers in our northernmost community, Fernandina Beach. While staff attended to Volusia and Nassau counties intensely, outreach coordinator Amber Grafft-Weiss maintained regular visits to schools in nearly all counties and attended statewide teacher conferences. Site ID specialist Toni Wallace responded to request from landowners to document unrecorded sites on public and private properties.

Social media continued to be a theme across the quarter. The blog drive and rotating responsibility calendar paid off with visitation tripling over the quarter. A schedule was set to maintain the strong presence on-line and blog for local and county resources that have restricted access to the internet. Lessons learned from social media were shared with heritage partners by a pilot workshop with local participants including Timucuan NPS, FPAN, SAAA, and St. Augustine Lighthouse staff. The workshop will repeat for SHA 2011 in Austin and be part of the professional development series as part of NERC 2010-2011 work plan objectives.

The Center met another objective for 500th and 450th commemoration planning by submitting a small-matching grant application in December. Timucuan Technology is the working title for lesson plans targeting middle school students to focus on prehistoric biotechnology. Understanding the adaptation and uses of biological products (corn, dogs, trees for shelter and transportation, plants and seeds, marine and estuary animals, sponge spicules) by the Timucuans will help students discuss present day rising sea levels, subsistence, and medical issues.
